

“The best part of being a doctor is the interaction I have with my patients and feeling that I'm helping them in some way. ”

About Catherine Anichini, MD

When she was eight years old, Dr. Catherine Anichini's trip to the hospital for a stomach bug sparked her curiosity of physiology and her passion for family medicine. "As a family physician, I'm able to address just about any medical condition that a patient might develop," she says. "The best part of being a doctor is the interaction I have with my patients and feeling that I'm helping them in some way. I enjoy working with seniors and hearing their life stories. I also feel that they are the most appreciative of the care they receive. I like listening to them and getting to know them as people, so they feel like someone cares. I will always do what's best for my patients."
