“Listening to the patient is the most important attribute that a caregiver and provider can do.”

About Paul Johnstone, D.O.

Dr. J considers it a “privilege” to care for the senior population, especially since they have contributed so much to society. He strives to help patients “navigate the often confusing world of medical information” through education and open communication. He always takes the time to identify his patients’ needs and include them in the discussions surrounding their care to ensure treatment plans align with “their understanding and desires.” He adds, “Listening to the patient is the most important attribute that a caregiver and provider can do.”

In his free time, Dr. J enjoys traveling and collecting wine. He is also a proud U.S. Navy veteran, where he served as a Family Medicine Physician for 6 years.
