“My goal is to provide great healthcare by treating patients the way I would want myself or anyone in my own family to be treated.”

About Miasha Crutchfield, NP

Miasha Crutchfield was drawn to medicine by a genuine desire to help others improve their health — and found her calling working with the senior population. "Working with seniors allows me to work with those who are sometimes the most likely to need assistance with managing their health," she says. She builds relationships through open communication, transparency, and a personalized approach — finding something relatable in each patient to provide care rooted in empathy, compassion, and trust.

Miasha believes great healthcare is a team effort between patient and provider. She focuses on educating patients about their conditions, advising them on actionable steps toward their goals, and managing both acute and chronic health conditions based on best practice standards. "My goal is to provide great healthcare by treating patients the way I would want myself or anyone in my own family to be treated," she says.

When not with patients, Miasha enjoys spending time with family and friends, practicing her Christian faith, traveling, reading, going to the movies, and taking walks.
